

If you weren't allowed to draw,
what would happen to your crayons?

If you could sing like a bird,
would your cage be gold or silver?

If you lived in a seashell,
would you get used to sandy floors?

If you could ask your dog a question,
what would it be?

If you lived in Paris,
what would you eat for breakfast?

If you could stamp all week,
how much card stock would you need?

If you had to cook for an army,
would you use dehydrated potatoes?

If you look at stained glass,
do you see a reflection or the images beyond?

If you had a million dollars,
what would you buy yourself?

If you had a million dollars,
what would you buy me?

If someone looked into your purse,
would they find your heart?

If cookies had no calories,
would they taste as good?

LIFE QUESTIONS

If you are happy,
who do you tell first?

If you are sad,
who do you call first?

If you had an extra room,
what would you put in it?

Everybody has stuff.

If you couldn't have coffee,
would you want breakfast?

If you were born this year,
who would you want to be?

If you are curious,
are you also impatient?

If you were a firefly,
how often would you light up?

If the newspaper didn't come,
would you miss it?

If you had wings, would you miss your hands?

If you lived in a tower,
how many friends would you invite for dinner?

If you could draw all week,
how many pads of paper would you need?

They tell me this type of ink
will wash off in time.
But I'll still know it was there.

If a tree were the same size as a dog,
would you get lost in the forest?

If thorns weren't sharp,
would roses cost so much per dozen?

...once having read that these birds mate for life,
I always try to count them, and feel a relief
if the number turns out to be even.

If your sketchbook is empty, what do you draw first?
